Permanently conserving land to benefit the natural and human communities of western Penobscot Bay since 1986

A new beginning for the Simonton Quarry Preserve

As 2014 wound to a close, three land trusts conducted two land transfers to create one bigger and better preserve in Rockport. First, the Nature Conservancy in Maine (TNC) transferred to us its Simonton Corner Quarry Preserve. Subsequently, Maine Farmland Trust transferred to us an adjoining property, known locally as the Maple Grove, so that its six acres could be added to the original preserve.

Conservation of the Simonton Corner Quarry Preserve was initially proposed in the late 1960s by A.H. Chatfield, Jr. of the Chatfield family that conserved Rockport's Aldermere Farm. It became a TNC preserve in 1972. The 19.5-acre property comprises most of three quarries, including Eells Quarry which is 180 feet deep at its deepest point. Spanning either side of North Main Street, the preserve also features frontage on the Goose River. The historic quarries once played a key role in Rockport's lime-quarrying past, with a train running from the open pits to the lime kilns on Rockport Harbor. This industrial history is still visible, if softened by the growth of surrounding forest in the many decades since.

The Nature Conservancy conserves land world-wide, and has protected over a million acres in Maine, including more than 75 preserves. Given the vast scale of their conservation work, transferring this small preserve to us made sense. As the local land trust, we've been overseeing the preserve's stewardship for many years, so the ownership transfer won't change its general management or create any added burden on us.

"Coastal Mountains Land Trust has done a great job of helping us steward Simonton Corner Quarry over the past 15 years," affirmed Nancy Sferra, Director of Stewardship and Ecological Management for

Community supports new trails in Swanville and Northport

We believe strongly that one of the best ways to engage people with the mission and work of land conservation is to invite them to explore a new preserve in their community. People seem to embrace a preserve once they've had a firsthand opportunity to get to know it by following a stream, finding an unusual plant, or learning a new bird call there.

This past year, people got very excited about two of our newest preserves. They were so enthusiastic that we quickly found ourselves off and running with development of two new trails that will make it even easier for people to enjoy these special places.

Meadow Brook Preserve – Hawk-Fry Tract

Early last spring a group of volunteers, including some members of the Belfast Bay Watershed Coalition (BBWC), assisted Land Trust staff with an ecological inventory of the Hawk-Fry Tract of the Meadow Brook Preserve in Swanville, a property generously donated to us in September 2013 by David Hawk and Patti Fry. The purpose of the inventory was to put together a baseline for the benefit of future preserve management. Together, participants developed a detailed ecological description of the property, including a map of all natural community types, a list of plant species, observations of invasive exotic plant species, and notes about sensitive locations that might deserve special protection moving forward. This is the point where we generally take a year or so to plan and raise funds for the future management of the property, including any trail building.

At the Hawk-Fry Tract, however, our volunteer crew was so enthusiastic that we decided to go ahead with building a trail right away. Backed by generous financial support from BBWC and the Maine Community Foundation's Fund for Maine Land Conservation, a committed crew of volunteers quickly installed a 0.8-mile section of trail that wanders through the property to the center point of the greater Hurds Pond conservation focus area and offers beautiful views of Hurds Pond and the surrounding wetlands. As part of the trail

TNC. “We’re pleased to transfer ownership of the preserve to be used for the Land Trust’s ongoing conservation programs.”

The Maple Grove addition, which was part of a larger farm property recently purchased by Maine Farmland Trust, contains a portion of the back quarry and will thus enable us to improve public access to that area.

“Transfer of this property to Coastal Mountains Land Trust is one important piece of a plan to preserve agricultural land and open space associated with the conservation of the former Spear Farm in Camden and Rockport,” said Adam Bishop, Project Manager for Maine Farmland Trust. “The Land Trust just made sense as the logical owner for this part of the property. Their ownership will allow for the preservation of an important historical resource, the quarries, while at the same time enabling continued management of the property’s sugar bush.” A state-wide organization based in Belfast, Maine Farmland Trust works to protect farmland and to keep farming in Maine viable and vital.

The story of what is now called the Simonton Quarry Preserve is a perfect example of how Maine’s diverse land trusts work together successfully to achieve mutual conservation goals.

BALD AND RAGGED MOUNTAINS CAMPAIGN, PHASE TWO

Progress as of 1 February 2015

Fundraising goal	$3,000,000
Fundraising progress	$2,047,155
Land conservation progress	1,777 acres – 51% of Bald and Ragged Mountains Focus Area

We added the Little Ragged Ledges Tract to our Ragged Mountain Preserve in December. This 42-acre property is essential to furthering the vision of the Round the Mountain Trail around Ragged. It also provides the first physical connection of the Ragged Mountain Preserve to the 583-acre Bald Mountain Preserve on the east side of Barnestown Road.

“We’re delighted to have been able to conserve this particular tract, as it had previously been slated for residential development,” stated Doug Sensenig, our Executive Director. “In land conservation work there is often only ‘one bite at the apple’ before a property is lost to conservation. We tried several times to buy what is now the Little Ragged Ledges Tract, losing out in each case to another buyer. But fortunately our patience and perseverance paid off for this key property.”

project, we constructed approximately 75 feet of cedar bog bridging, installed a new trailhead sign, and used a volunteer’s tractor to pull logs across the trailhead to prevent access by motorized vehicles. It is amazing what can get done when people get excited! Many months ahead of schedule, the trail is now open for people to explore and enjoy.

McLellan Poor Preserve – Wolfe-Cunning Tract

Following their 2013 sale to us of 11 acres that became part of the McLellan-Poor Preserve in Northport, Elisabeth Wolfe and Michael Cunning continued to work with us to plan future access to this property from Herrick Road. Over the course of several months, we walked the woods together and discussed a variety of options. But topographical constraints were getting in the way. Finally, Wolfe and Cunning offered to donate a trail easement allowing us to build and permanently maintain a trail across a section of their remaining land. Thanks to their generosity and community spirit, we’re now able to build the trail in the most desirable and feasible location possible. We’re actively mapping out the remaining sections of this new trail system and anticipate beginning construction this spring!

A new year brings new staff

Nora Hayes, Outreach and Administrative Coordinator

We’re thrilled to welcome Nora Hayes as our new Outreach and Administrative Coordinator. Nora has taken over for Ellen Skoczenski, who moved on in mid-December to attend graduate school. Nora brings to the job her tremendous enthusiasm for land conservation, as well as her expertise in marketing, outreach, and communications.

to Camden with her two children in 2013. She has worked professionally in the nonprofit arena for over ten years. Her interest in nature and landscape was formed at an early age by international travel and, especially, spending summers in the woods of northern Minnesota, on the plains of Iowa, and on the shores of Lake Michigan, all of which helped hone her keen sense of place.

Please stop by our office soon to introduce yourself to Nora and welcome her to the Land Trust family. We’re sure you’ll find her passion for exploring and sharing the local landscape contagious in the best possible way!

Poet on the Hill

Gary Lawless begins Arts on the Hill residency in June

Our Arts on the Hill program kicks off its second season when we host poet and teacher Gary Lawless on Beech Hill Preserve June 21 – July 28. During the time of his residency there, he will coordinate several events and a series of poetry outings on the preserve, including one especially for kids.

“This isn’t about me as artist-in-residence, but me as facilitator to encourage people to share their responses to the preserve,” Gary affirmed. “I think of these outings as walking poetry workshops on which I’ll encourage visitors to pay attention to what they see, smell, and hear as they walk the trails.”

He hopes to initiate an ongoing public poem at Beech Nut to which visitors to the historic hut will be invited to add their own lines. Another plan is to establish a large preserve map for people to share special experiences from their preserve visit. He will also coordinate such events as a Summer Solstice poetry reading at Beech Nut, a full moon viewing party in the Japanese poetic tradition for the July full moon, and a potential collaboration with students at Maine Media Workshops. He has already established a blog to share his and others’ poems about Beech Hill, which you can read at: beechhillpilgrimage.blogspot.com/.

A native of Belfast now living in Nobleboro, Gary is co-owner of Gulf of Maine Bookstore in Brunswick. He’s widely published, with 16 collections in the United States (and a new one, Caribou Planet, due out this fall) and four in Italy. He has given readings and workshops in eight countries, working with diverse populations of all ages, and has been artist-in-residence in Sitka, Alaska and at Isle Royale National Park on Lake Superior. In addition to the beauty of his own words, Gary’s strength in eliciting others’ voices, particularly in connection to the wild places of the world, should make his poetry offerings on Beech Hill an engaging experience for all participants.

Dates when Gary plans to be on the preserve are listed on the back page; visit our website in late spring for more detailed information on what he has planned.

Lincolntonville artist Dudley Zopp will be our second featured Arts on the Hill artist this summer. She plans to create an installation in Beech Nut relating to Maine’s geological phenomena. Our Summer Newsletter will provide more information on her and the public events she has planned for her residency, which will run from August through mid-September.

Recycle your bottles with CLYNK

It’s good for the planet... and for us!

Thanks to Maine establishing one of the first bottle bills in the country back in the 1970s, we’re all very used to recycling our bottles and cans—and enjoying the cash rewards for doing so. Through an innovative recycling program called CLYNK offered in Hannaford supermarkets throughout the state, those bulging bags of beer bottles can now benefit the Land Trust. CLYNK’s Community Cash program provides participating organizations like us with specially coded bags for recyclables. We share these bags with you, our supporters, who then take full bags to the CLYNK redemption station at your local Hannaford. The special label on the bag ensures that we receive credit for the full redemption value of its contents. It’s that easy! Stop by our office today to pick up your bags, or if you don’t live nearby, give us a call and we’ll mail some to you (they can be redeemed at any Maine Hannaford). For more information on how CLYNK’s Community Cash program works, please visit www.clynk.com.

When a tree falls in the forest

Over the course of the last two winters, our corner of Maine has experienced a series of dramatic—and very destructive—storms. High winds and heavy precipitation (be it rain, ice, or snow) have resulted in extended power outages, measurable economic losses, and extensive damage to trees. If you've visited any of our preserves over the last few months, you'll have noticed that they haven't been spared. Repeated blow-downs have blocked many trails, and debris has littered trailheads and parking areas. We're extremely grateful to the volunteers who worked tirelessly with us to clean up, remove blow-downs, and reroute trails when necessary. (Recent trail-clearing at Fernalds Neck Preserve alone, for example, required over 80 man-hours of hard work!)

Off the trails, however, you may have noticed that our management approach doesn't involve much forest cleanup, either after storms or as woods mature. Instead, we generally allow natural processes, including storm recovery, to unfold without human interference or alteration. By doing so, we're fostering conditions that allow for greater biological diversity. Storms and the "damage" they cause in our forests can thus be seen from a different perspective when viewed in this purely ecological light.

Storms play a key role in determining the composition of ecological communities and are important for maintaining wildlife habitat. When trees are blown over by wind, the gaps created allow sunlight to reach the forest floor, providing the opportunity for previously overshadowed or younger trees to grow. More light reaching the understory also encourages greater richness in the plants growing there. When storms happen over and over, the result is a more differentiated, multi-aged forest that hosts greater habitat diversity than a single-aged forest.

Storms and windthrow also result in increased amounts of dead wood on the forest floor. This coarse woody debris is an important component of cover habitat for an array of forest creatures, including various insects, mice, frogs, and salamanders. Given recent management practices, Maine's forests today feature much less woody debris than the forests of old and, as a result, less wildlife.

So the next time you're hiking on one of our preserves and you come across a tree felled by a recent storm, try to see the productive, rather than destructive, effects of the weather. Take a moment to observe what positive processes might have already begun to take place: what seedlings have emerged, what new plants are growing, and what birds are singing?

Summer work opportunities at Beech Hill Preserve and beyond

Stewardship Intern

We're looking for a dedicated individual to join our stewardship staff for up to six months to assist in stewardship of all our preserves, with a special focus on the Beech Hill Blueberry Farm. Responsibilities include organic blueberry farm and harvest management, trail work, habitat and invasives management, public outreach, and volunteer coordination. Applicants should be willing and able to work independently, use small power equipment, articulate the organization's mission to the public, and have an interest in land stewardship and sustainable agriculture. This paid, multi-faceted conservation stewardship internship will involve a full-time commitment from May through October (flexible start and end dates). Housing may be available if needed. Our past interns have gone on to promising futures, including work at other land trusts, and agricultural, forestry, and GIS graduate programs. So you never know where an internship with us might lead you!

Blueberry Rakers, Winnowers, and Packers

The Beech Hill Blueberry Farm needs several motivated, energetic individuals for hand raking, sorting, and packing organic blueberries during the summer harvest. A four-week commitment is requested, starting in late July. Hours are irregular, dependent on the vagaries of nature, but rakers and winnowers can expect to work four hours/day, and packers six hours/day, five-six days/week.

For complete descriptions of these job opportunities, please contact Jackie Stratton, our Stewardship Project Manager, at (207) 236-7091 or blueberries@coastalmountains.org. We're hoping to hire soon, so please get in touch now if you're interested!

Members: It's a berry good time of year

Pre-order your Beech Hill blueberries now!

Current members are invited to participate in the popular blueberry pre-order program. Members may order ten-pound boxes of beautiful, MOFGA-certified organic Beech Hill Blueberries, and we encourage you to act quickly! Last year we met our pre-order quota in just a couple of weeks. As always, blueberry sales benefit stewardship of the Beech Hill Preserve.

The blueberry order form, which should be enclosed in this newsletter, has two sections: a pre-order section for ordering up to three boxes, which requires advance payment, and a waitlist request section for ordering more than three boxes of berries if they're available.

Not a member? If you are not yet a member but would like to pre-order berries now, please add a membership donation to your pre-order form (see details on the reverse side of the form).

If no order form is enclosed in this newsletter, email a request to blueberries@coastalmountains.org or call us at (207) 236-7091.

Attention Juicers, Jammers and Vintners!

Interested in making blueberry juice, wine, or jam?

The Beech Hill Blueberry Farm will have a minimum of 1,500 pounds of B-grade organic lowbush blueberries for sale at a considerable discount during the 2015 harvest. Please contact Jackie Stratton at (207) 236-7091.

2015 EVENTS CALENDAR

Throughout the year we offer opportunities to explore and learn more about the landscape of the western Penobscot region. This year's calendar is still a work in progress, so for updates or further details on our events, please check our website and local newspapers or call us at (207) 236-7091. All events are free of charge.

You asked for it!

Saturday work parties are now a thing

Those who work Monday through Friday have complained about not being able to participate in our lively work parties, almost all of which happen on weekdays. We heard you—and now we want to put you to work! Join us on the trail and in the woods at one or all of our six Saturday work parties this year. The complete schedule will be posted on our website and shared with our volunteer email list:

- Saturday, April 18
- Saturday, May 16
- Saturday, June 6, National Trails Day

September, October and November's Saturday work party dates will be posted in our Summer Newsletter.

Volunteers needed!

Interested in volunteering with the Land Trust? Not sure how to start? Join us for one of our two orientation sessions designed to provide new volunteers with an overview of the Land Trust and the varied volunteer positions now available. Orientation sessions will be held:

- Wednesday, April 1, 5:00 – 6:30 PM, Coastal Mountains Land Trust Office, Camden
- Wednesday, April 15, 5:00 – 6:30 PM, Belfast Free Library

Currently we are recruiting for all volunteer positions:

- Outreach: Beech Nut Docent, Special Events, Office Projects, Youth Liaison
- Stewardship: Preserve and Easement Steward, Invasives Removal Team, Trail Monitor, Beech Hill Farm Hand

Volunteer job descriptions can be found on our website's Volunteer page: www.coastalmountains.org/get\_involved/volunteer.html.

Introducing new board member: Darby Urey

"Ever since I can remember, being in the woods is where I've felt most at peace and connected with the world. My wife and I chose to relocate our family to the Midcoast largely because of the accessibility of the outdoors: the woods, trails, mountains, and waters. When I learned of the Land Trust and its incredible conservation efforts, I was determined to contribute in some way. I'm thrilled to be serving on the Board and working collaboratively towards conservation of our natural places."

ARTS ON THE HILL SCHEDULE – June & July 2015

Poet and teacher Gary Lawless will be offering several interactive outings and projects to inspire poetry and creativity throughout his term as Artist on the Hill at Beech Hill Preserve, June 21 – July 28. Specific events may change and new events added, so please visit our website in June for more details about what he has planned for each of the following days he will be on the hill:

- Sunday, June 21, Summer Solstice Poetry Reading, Beech Nut, 6:30 – 8:30 PM
- Tuesday, June 23, Birding/Poetry Walk, Rockville Street Trailhead, 7:00 – 9:00 AM
- Wednesday, July 1, Beech Nut Open House, 10:00 AM – 2:00 PM
- Thursday, July 2, Full Moon Poetry and Tea Event, 7:00 – 8:30 PM
- Tuesday, July 7, Poetry Walk
- Tuesday, July 14, Children's Poetry Walk
- Saturday, July 18, Beech Nut Open House, 10:00 AM – 2:00 PM
- Tuesday, July 21, Poetry Walk
- Tuesday, July 28, Poetry Walk/Blueberry Farm Tour
